

Lifecycle Engagement Project

Project Summary

This project is a small example of my writing for <https://www.apolloschool.io/>. Apollo is a cohort-based program where students (9-13 years old) learn about entrepreneurship. This sample project includes three parts:

1. Sales Email – Written for a prospective family that has not yet joined Apollo.
2. Welcome Email – Written for a family that has just been accepted into Apollo.
3. Lead Magnet Concept – Written for Apollo's marketing team to propose a concept that captures the attention of potential students or parents.

Apollo Program Team

Part 3: Lead Magnet Concept

Concept Proposal: Animated Comic Lead Magnet

Title: An Entrepreneurial Adventure with Apollo

Rationale:

The concept of an animated comic as a lead magnet for Apollo is compelling for several reasons. First, the combination of text and animation significantly improves accessibility. Animated comics offer a dynamic way to present information that is easily digestible for a broad audience, including visual learners and those who may struggle with large blocks of text. This format ensures that the program's key benefits and messages are conveyed effectively, making it easier for both students and parents to understand and appreciate the value of Apollo.

Moreover, animation helps the comic stand out from other promotional videos and traditional marketing materials. In an age where video content is ubiquitous, animation provides a unique and visually captivating medium that can capture attention more effectively. Animated sequences can illustrate complex concepts in a simplified and entertaining manner, keeping the audience engaged from start to finish. This creative approach not only differentiates Apollo from competitors, but also leaves a lasting impression, encouraging prospective students and their families to explore the program further and consider enrollment.

Overview:

Create an engaging and informative animated comic that targets both students and their parents, highlighting the key benefits and experiences offered by Apollo. Incorporating text and animation, the story will follow the journey of a young protagonist developing their entrepreneurial spirit with the help of Apollo, emphasizing mentorship, hands-on learning, networking opportunities, and personal growth.

Target Audience:

- High school students (ages 14-18) interested in entrepreneurship
- Parents/guardians of high school students seeking valuable programs to support their child's future success

Protagonist:

- Cameron (gender-neutral to appeal to as many students as possible); 16 years old; an imaginative high school student who has a passion for innovation and problem-solving.

Supporting Characters:

- Peers: Fellow participants in Apollo who share experiences and collaborate with Cameron.
- Mentor: A congenial and sage industry expert who guides Cameron on their journey
- Parents/Guardians: Cameron's supportive family who are excited about Apollo

Plot Outline:

- Introduction:
 - Cameron discovers Apollo while searching for summer activities that can help turn their ideas into real-world solutions.
- Enrollment:
 - Cameron and their family members discuss the program. They enroll and meet their mentor and peers, creating an immediate sense of community.
- Mentorship and Learning:
 - Through animated sequences, Cameron learns about ideation, market research, product development, and pitching ideas. These lessons are depicted in a fun and engaging way.
- Networking and Collaboration:
 - Cameron attends workshops and networking events, making valuable connections and gaining insights from successful entrepreneurs.
- Challenges and Growth:
 - Cameron faces and overcomes various challenges, demonstrating resilience and adaptability.
- Achievement:
 - The comic concludes with Cameron successfully launching a startup, showcasing the transformation and growth achieved through Apollo.

Visual Style:

This video will feature dynamic animations that capture the youthful excitement of high school and the energy of entrepreneurship. It will include relatable and diverse characters in vibrant, modern settings.

Call to Action:

The video will end with a strong call to action that encourages students and families to visit the Apollo website, sign up for an information session, or directly apply to the program.

Distribution:

- Email Campaigns: Include in email marketing campaigns targeting prospective students and parents.
- Website: Feature the animated comic prominently on the Apollo homepage.
- Social Media: Share snippets and highlights on social media platforms to drive traffic and engagement.
